Turkey: There is growing restiveness in Turkey. Political observers doubt that the second Inonu coalition government, formed on 25 June, can survive more than a few months. Parliament reconvenes in early September, and a new political crisis appears inevitable during the following months, possibly bringing on renewed military intervention. Many military officers as well as major segments of the population have become disillusioned with the country's lack of economic and social progress since the May 1960 military coup. Lawlessness and rowdyism have increased; and intervillage strife has strained the resources of the local gendarmerie.
